The Institute brings together service-learning professionals, with a well-established foundation in service-learning pedagogy, who seek to enhance their leadership capacities, deepen their institutional and community impact, and chart the next steps in their professional development as change agents on campus, in communities, and across the field. Together we will explore connections between cutting edge questions, thinking, and practice in community engagement and the “north stars” or the ultimate purposes that ground, guide, and give meaning to our individual and collective work. Participants reflect on the trajectory of their own roles and responsibilities as leaders in community engagement and return to their campuses with a plan that reflects their institutional and leadership priorities that will enhance their effectiveness and is consistent with their goals, talents, and strengths.
